

Sanctuary

Wed, Mar 11 2015 09:23am EDT 1

Another dreary day in the Negaverse. Or, what came close to daytime with all that smog blocking out the sun, casting an eerie red glow on the decrepit city below.

Ring-ring-ring. "Do not fear the unknown! Sanctuary will protect you!"

On the downtown street stood a nun, ringing her bell. With her hair tucked away beneath her habit, her pretty face had nowhere to hide -- still glowing with youth and optimism. A stark contrast to her hideously hunchbacked figure.

Most of the passerbys ignored both her and the donation tray she carried. Most were smart enough to know better than to help the hopeful; Lord Negaduck had outlawed all acts of kindness and charity, after all.

Ring-ring. "Please donate! A monster walks among us, and preys on the homeless! We must protect our vulnerable! All are welcome behind Sanctuary doors!"

There were no churches in the Negaverse -- not anymore, anyway. Negaduck would not tolerate any of that nonsense in his city. But that didn't stop St. Canard's bleeding hearts from forming underground safe spaces for religious freedom -- often referred to as 'Sanctuary'. And now, more than ever, as citizens disappeared, or their bodies turned up mutilated and drained of all blood, was there a great need for faith.

"We need food, clothing, and anything else you can spare!" She begged apathetic strangers as they passed her by. "We must join together to fight the growing darkness!"

"Or..." she said, her voice in a semi-growl from the shadows. "You could just join the shadows and quit your bitchin'." Ah, spoken like a true Negaversian. Her eyes were glowing bright red from the shadows as she sized up the nun. Having once again wandered off on her own-- with a promise that she would not hunt-- NPiper scented the air and followed a strange smell to this location. Her body moved fluidly as she began a slow stalk. "What is this place...?" she asked, eyeing the door behind the nun. "I smell several pr-- people." The homeless were the only prey that NPiper knew thus far, but even she had common sense enough to know not to address them personally as such. Of course... if she truly had common sense she would not be standing here talking to the bell swinging goodie two-shoes in front of her. "And what are you...?" she asked directly, shifting her pacing and heading in another direction. "You do not smell like the rest of them..." Maybe she hadn't showered in a long time?

Instantly she reached for a crucifix, holding it out in front of her.

"You... you've been tainted by the sin." She trembled, eyes wide with fear. "Stay away!"

She watched Piper carefully... this woman was so young. Her life taken from her so early. It was tragic.

"You have my pity... I hope someone slays the creature who did this to you. Perhaps then you'll have a chance at redemption."

"Well, duuh..." NPiper said, rolling her eyes. Being tainted by sin in the Negaverse was like being vaccinated elsewhere. Only the hippies and misinformed attempted otherwise. ((BOOM, enjoy that controversy)) She stared at the crucifix like a curious cat, blinking rapidly and tilting her head. She took a few steps closer, trying to figure out exactly what this nun planned to do with that doodad.

It would seem someone did not advise her on the finer points of vampirism.

"I do not need your pity.... but....what do you mean slay? And redemption?" she asked, fighting the temptation to reach out and bat the crucifix.

"You... must be a young one. A juvenile." She frowned. "How long ago were you changed?"

The elder ones never moved toward the crucifix.

"Well..." She explained slowly. "When the one who changes you is destroyed, it is said that the effects of your disease will reverse itself, returning you as you were. It is God's way of granting you a chance at redemption."

"Who in their right mind would give this up?" she asked, straightening. "Immortality, speed, strength, enhanced senses... I've never felt so alive." She grinned, folding her arms over her chest. "And in case you hadn't noticed... God does not exist here." She opened her arms as if to motion towards the entire city. "I mean... look around. What God allows this level of destruction with no intervention? There is no justice, no righteousness... hell, you can't even find people to help each other out. The only reason the rats scurry together is in hopes that OTHER rats get picked off as prey before they do." She laughed, tossing her hair back and placing her hands on her hips. "So that being the case... being the predator makes sense. It is logical. And I would love to see someone try to defeat my master. He is far too strong and blackened for even death." Spoken with clear adoration.

"You've also thrown away the gift God gave you: Free will. You will forever be a slave, and you will never see the sun again." Though that applied to pretty much all Negaversians, but that's beside the point.

She shook her head. "You're wrong about people. Even here, in this city, there are good souls. More than you realize. I've met them. They've helped me gather food for the homeless. We work together, and give each other support. God is testing us, that is why the world is what it is."

NPiper's grin widened. "God is... testing you..." she chuckled. "The marvelous, gracious, loving God of the good book would seek it fit to bestow his own people with immeasurable hardships... You claim I am playing the Devil's Game, but it sounds like God's game is just as perverted." She took a step closer to the nun. "There is no lie in what I am. We play no games, we make no promises other than to be true to our nature. Your God fills you with false promises of happiness and glory and then drops you in a cesspool of filth that he.. she.. it allowed to happen. Given the chance, any of those 'good people' you speak of would revert right back to their carnal selves to save their own skins, and any thought of 'God' would not stop them from doing so."

"What you fail to understand is that I don't do good things hoping to be rewarded... I do it because deep down, I know it's the right thing. Regardless of what God throws at us, I know, I feel, that doing harm to others is wrong."

She smiled weakly. "After all, the only reason we live in a 'cesspool of filth' is because we have chosen to live this way. If more people did good deeds, then the city would no longer be in this state. Don't you see? God has given us the tools to change everything right now. It's simply up to each of us, as individuals, to make the right choice."

It was a head.

More specifically a head belonging to one of those so called religious people. In fact, the cross was still about the neck of the victim.

"So, tell me again about your God. I would so love for you to tell me how he hasn't abandoned you to what you keep referring to as the players of the Devil's game." A dark shape loomed above from where the head had fallen. He was staring down at them with blazing red eyes while licking blood from his fangs.

She frowned at the head. Oh, poor Titus... he was such a kind soul. At least now he was in a better place.

Staring up at the figure responsible, she was surprisingly calm. "You'll find out someday, when it's far too late for you!"

NPiper stared at the head.

And then started purring. Decapitation. Who knew it hit the pleasure center in her? She turned her head up to look at the assailant, calling out in a soft, sexy voice. "My master..."

Yeah... she may not have had total free will, but what will she had, she used to manipulate someone stronger than her. Survival of the most useful and all that jazz.

And hey... brains! There was a zombie Jesus joke in there somewhere...

"She wouldn't be fast or strong enough to use it." NTrevor sneered. Licking his fangs he approached the nun. "Tell me. Just how much faith do you have in your God to beg for mercy and spare you from the horror you are about to experience?"

He paused at his mate's comment. The vampire narrowed his eyes as he hissed again. He hadn't thought of that. That would explain all of the name calling and the fearless devotion to the faith even in the face of horror and death.

"She has a point. You are lying to us."

He stayed close to his mate in case this nun decided to pull something. Having his mate and hunting partner hurt or worse would certainly set him off. Angel or not, this nun would face a fury she wouldn't believe if she tried anything foolish like that.

How can you even pretend that you're living out in the open, when you nest in dark places and stay out of sight? You're not only lying to me, but to yourselves!"

He narrows his eyes. "Redemption. Hmph. Why should I seek redemption from a being that abandoned me?"

He really wanted to silence her. He had heard enough of her babble and the so called faith that was supposed to comfort or help them or whatever lies they believe.

"I just told you how we are being truthful" she said, pausing in pursuit. Was this woman dense?

"Does a wolf announce to its prey when it attacks? A lion? No, of course not. We're simply doing what is in our nature. Common sense dictates that everyone in St. Canard is someone's prey. Either a mugger, Negaduck, or a vampire. We make no excuses... we don't have to. Because we are being truthful."

Her gaze wandered towards the other side of the street. A little old woman was stumbling about her way, unaccompanied. "For example..." she motioned towards the woman. "Weak. Sickly. Natural selection *demand*s she be picked off.... so..." The word had barely left her lips before NPiper was racing towards her target.

NPiper hissed at the tackling.... you know... once she was able to get her breath back from the massive boob-smoosh-age. She went to bite, since there was plenty of fleshy meats right there, but was caught off guard by NTrevor's voice. Blinking, she repeated only one word. "Mate?" Confused. He had never said anything about being mates... sex was just sex after all. She did not have too much more time to think on it, because... old lady across the street happened to notice the commotion, and seemed to have decent eye sight. If NTrevor did indeed sample a taste, he'd be in for a horrible surprise. It was bad enough being splashed with holy water -- it was something else entirely to essentially chug the 200 proof equivalent. Piper's early suspicions were correct about the unique nature of this particular nun...

NTrevor snarled and went after the elderly woman after abandoning the nun. All witnesses had to be dealt with. At least she would be a quick kill. The poor old lady shouldn't have been there.

He closed in on her and sank the fangs into her neck. He shook her with his bill tightly fastened to cause even more damage since it would tear her apart.

"You will be next!" He spun around to glare at the nun after dropping the body. His bill was now stained with blood.

NPiper purred seeing NTrevor tearing into the old woman. That carnage... that destruction... what a turn on.
I want to bite! NPiper began squirming eagerly to try dealing with the fleshy pile on top of her. Too bad she simply had not been taught better. She sank her fangs right into the nun's forearm. And immediately let out an ear shattering shriek, shaking her bill and spitting angrily. Somehow in her frenzy she managed to free a sleeved arm and began to rub at her bill and mouth, trying to get the blood off of her as it burned her.

After locating the elderly woman's family and delivering the tragic news, along with the body, the nun headed to the homeless compound -- the very same one pre-vamp Piper had been investigating.

Normally when she came to visit, she brought food, clothing, and other supplies to help out the less fortunate. Today, however, she was armed with a different variety of supplies.

Stakes. Crosses. Portable UV lights. Bottles of holy water. "Nono, you're not supposed to drink it." She spoke softly to one rather grizzled old drake.

After ensuring that everyone had received some form of protection, she tried to explain how and when to use it. "Please, do not wander off alone. Stay in groups, avoid dark areas with poor lighting... nobody is safe."

Her heart ached for them. She wanted to protect each and every person in the city, but she knew it was an impossible feat. The vampires were not the only threat, after all. There was that other drake she'd heard rumours about, who did terrible, awful things to the heads of the innocent. And of course, there was Negaduck... although the despot's presence in the city was shrinking as he spent more of his time in Darkwing's dimension.

Somewhere on the far end of town...

"So not only are there vampires attacking, but there appears to be someone helping the homeless." The poor drake that had to make the report was shaking as he stood in the doorway of what was known as the "skull room".

like the others." NHarou replies as he admired his latest piece for the collection. "You think they would learn by now. Oh, well. Just more skulls for the collection."

He set the skull among the others before stepping out of the room causing the other drake to back away from the door. He tapped a finger against his bill in thought.

"Perhaps I should pay a visit to our little friends." NHarou grins. "And show them horror."

Of course, he had to dress for the occasion. He slipped on his black military garb which he neatly straighten out. Must look presentable. He completed the look with a hat after slipping on a gas mask.

Time to stalk some helpless victim and draw the foolish hero out..

NPiper whined, burying her face against his neck and clinging to his clothing.

She calmed slightly, although the pain continued. After a few huffs, she forced out, "Wha..id hee oo?" She was trying hard not to move her lips to form letters. But she needed to know what had happened.

She let out a long whine. Whatever he was promising to take her pain away she wanted it. Badly. That and to hide away.

"I think you were right in your suspicion about her being an angel. When you bit her, you relieved damage from her holy power." NTrevor says as he picks her up. "It burns."

Even though he ached from the flash burns, he carried her home. They needed to get away for awhile and heal. He felt more comfortable once they were home and in the dark room that had served as their bedroom. Light was hurting his eyes since they were made sensitive from the flash of bright light so the darkness was a welcome sight. He laid her on the bed before heading downstairs to get the ointment that would help cool and soothe their burns.

Trevor, of course, was right. That was not 'hunchback' she was hiding under her garb. But Negacia had to be careful, especially since Negs had long since put a bounty on her head... and other body parts. Angel wings were worth their weight in gold in the Negaverse.

She was spending a lot of time with the homeless lately, as they were the most vulnerable and needed the most help. But eventually she would retreat back to her own 'hide-out': A run-down, closed off Church that could only be entered from the roof. Useful when you're the only one in the city who can fly.

You couldn't pay most Negaversians to go to Church, even with the doors flung wide open.

"Interesting place to hide in. No one to bother you." Came a muffled voice from the doorway of the church. His breathing could be heard from the mask.

NHarou, when was he heading towards where the homeless were taking refuge had spotted the nun. The drake that had informed him about someone helping the homeless had described the person as a hunchbacked old woman wearing a nun outfit. He followed her back to her hideout. The thing that interested him the most was when

He came in through the church doors.

"Who am I?" If she could see under the mask he was grinning. "General Harou."

He stepped from the door towards her. Some light streaking in from the hole in the ceiling had struck the red lens in the mask so it them appear to glow. His metal claws on his feet clicked against the flooring.

"You haven't heard of me? Interesting."

"Um well... the name sorta sounds familiar." Truthfully, she wasn't really good with names. Nor did she spend much time around others long enough to hear them talk. She heard whispers and rumours now and again, but she never stayed long enough to hear the details. It was often too horrible to imagine.

With each step he took forward, she took one step back. She tried her best not to judge others, but he was certainly not a friendly-looking person, especially with his mask.

"Um... what can I do for you?"

What caused the darkness in his heart no one not even him really knew. It could be from being around death ever since he crawled out of his egg. NHarou had been a soldier and a killer for most of his life. But he wasn't planning on stopping any time soon.

"If you mean Hell? I'm already living in it." NHarou says bluntly. If only she knew what growing up around death does to people.

He never stated what he did was a good thing and was well aware of he might be punished one day for it. He didn't fear punishment. As he believed he was already being punished for existing.

His sudden anger directed at her didn't surprise her. This was the typical Negaversian response -- almost to be expected. Instead she frowned, disappointed.

"They don't suffer. Many of them are quite happy... they've formed a community where they've made friends, and family. They talk about the future; a brighter one. They have faith, even when their current situation is so dire. As far as I'm concerned, that makes them the strongest of all of us."

He found this amusing. He's heard this before. From people who couldn't fathom or believe such terrible things existed.

Even as they spoke, one of the two monsters was out stalking some poor helpless victim. NTrevor had slipped out to pick off a loner that strayed too far from the homeless hideout. He had to be more careful since the angel was meddling and could cause trouble for them.

He and his mate needed food more than ever now, since they needed to heal from their burns caused by the angel, and the blood would help heal them faster. The vampire was still in pain as he body ached. But it didn't hinder his hunting prowess and it wasn't long before he sank his fangs into some unsuspecting victim that he caught outside alone.

NTrevor was dragging the prey off back to the nest before he had even stopped twitching. He did not want to get caught right now.

Something will need to be done about that angel.

I wonder if that is why you collect the skulls of those you perceive to be weaker than you? Because deep down, you envy those who are capable of being stronger than you. NPiper was whimpering... and touching her bill lightly. A few nasty boils had formed, and it hurt terribly to open her mouth, or move her lips. She had applied the ointment NTrevor gave her... and it had healed a lot... but she was not one hundred percent recovered. Far from it. She crawled out of bed, her stomach twisting with hunger. She wanted to hunt... but she was ordered to stay home. So... she looked forlornly out the window, waiting for her master to return to feed her.

He went downstairs to the kitchen to rummage around. Back he came with a pot that he planned on filling with blood. Setting it on the floor and placing it near the body, he made the wound in the neck bigger as he began squeezing out blood. Once it was full, he went back to her.

"Open. I'll pour it in."

She perched herself on the edge of the bed, watching him as he bled out the prey. She tilted her head slightly... curiously as she watched, wondering what his plan was.

And then it clicked. She murred a bit as he approached... both amused and curious... how was this not going to make a mess?

But she supposed there were worse things than being covered in blood. She tipped her head back and opened her mouth, waiting for him to pour the blood into her mouth. There was no way this could go wrong.

Her stomach finally full, she released him and made a motion with her hand to indicate that she was done. She leaned forward and nuzzled against him lightly in thanks before crawling onto the bed to curl up and rest.

"You should start feeling much better soon." He says before discarding the pot. Now it was his turn to feed. He drank whatever blood was left before tearing into the flesh.

Like her, he was glad for a decent meal as well. It was awhile before he was full and had licked every bone clean. He had devoured the entire brute to the point of feeling like he was going to burst. By the time he climbed into bed with NPiper, he was one very fat drake.

"I hope you enjoyed your meal." He purrs as he curls up next to her and nips at her neck again.

"Just rest now. I'm here." He purrs some more as he preened her. "We are healed we'll get that one that caused us pain and trying to take away our food source."

The vampire growled at the thought of her. How she had burned them. How was she making it harder to hunt since the homeless were being armed against them. He wanted to tear her apart for it.

If General Harou the Head Hunter doesn't first. As said drake was currently going after the angel in which the two vampires were unaware of.

She muffled her cries as the bullet tore through one of her wings, sending her careening in a circle. Fortunately she was able snag a ledge atop one of the glass windowpanes, a few stories about General Harou and the gas. Dangling now, she glanced down at him.

"No matter what you do to me, you shall always have my pity and my love." She assured him.

Just hold on a bit longer...

"Love? Pity? They won't matter when you're dead!" NHarou shot at her again. If he had to hear one more time about pity and love he would vomit.

She couldn't stay up there forever as far as he was concerned. She was a sitting duck so to speak. Lucky for her, he wasn't going to head shot her since he wanted her skull. He did not like his skulls having damage. It would ruin the beautiful works of art he makes out of them.
